Waiting at a Museum

I am going to a museum. I will probably have to wait.

‘Wait’ often means staying in one area without much to do. Most people do not enjoy waiting. Still, they wait for a very good reason.

Waiting also means each person will probably get a turn. That’s why most people decide to stay calm and wait.

People often have to wait at the museum door. There may be a line of people ready to visit the museum. They wait and then go inside.

People often have to wait at security. It takes a little time for security officers to check each bag. Then, each person goes inside.

Sometimes, people have to wait to use the restroom. This is because there are more people than toilets. They wait and then use the toilet.

People may need to wait to see a display. A popular display is one that many people want to see. It may be crowded around a popular display. When others move away, then it’s possible to see the display.
Other times, people have to wait to use a game, or participate in a museum activity. Especially if a game is fun, people may need to wait. Sometimes a game is so much fun that people say, “It was worth the wait.”

Staying calm makes waiting easier. Waiting may be difficult, but staying calm is smart. It makes waiting more comfortable for everyone.

Waiting is one way that people share a museum. When I visit the museum, I may have to wait. This is okay.

Sometimes people think of fun things they can do while waiting. What fun things do you do while you wait?
